In brief

Thanks to the possibilities of the modern internet, you can make anything from a few dollars on the side to a full-time income regardless of your age, background or qualifications. While there's a lot out there that should be avoided at all costs, many legitimate income streams are available for you to get into.

Thanks to the possibilities of the modern internet, you can make anything from a few dollars on the side to a full-time income regardless of your age, background or qualifications. While there's a lot out there that should be avoided at all costs, many legitimate income streams are available for you to get into.

In this post, we'll take a look at some of the best additional income sources available online today. Depending on your approach, you could use these methods to create your own unique way of earning an income through the internet and eventually replace your full-time job. All you need is time and a bit of know-how, so let's get started.

YouTube

You probably already know that YouTubers make their money from the ad revenue on their videos. But the reality is that unless you're getting millions upon millions of views, it's not going to be a great deal of cash. Fortunately, there are better ways to earn money from the videos you put up and perhaps more importantly, the people who watch them.

Take Callmart, for example. With their app, you can significantly increase your YouTube income by selling your free time to your followers through calls. You can connect with any of your followers worldwide and charge a fee to have conversations with them. This makes for a great way to up your revenue from each video you create.

English Tutoring

As long as you have a good grasp of English and an ability to teach, there are an increasing amount of people around the world who are willing to pay upwards of $25 per hour for your time. It's a lucrative and enjoyable way to make money from home and opens up the opportunity for you to travel the world.

An ESL (English as a Second Language) certification is recommended, though it's fairly simple to acquire. Once you have that, all you need is Skype and a website to start off with. Many platforms exist today as a hub for English teachers and students to get in touch, but you can also check out job listing websites such as Indeed for more work.

Fiverr

With the way Fiverr is currently set up, you can sell just about any service to a worldwide customer base. It can be as advanced as programming or as simple as singing a song. Chances are, someone is looking for your expertise. What's great here is that you can set your own rates and have tiered pricing options for different types of work.

You can also set when you're available to take orders. This makes for a highly flexible and possibly lucrative way to work at home. All you need is the ability to offer a service that stands out - be it a talent or a skill that you've learned.

These are just some of the many additional income streams that you can utilize without needing to put a great deal of time or effort into getting started. That said, a bit of time and effort is all you need to turn your side income into something great.
