Quick answer

If you spend time on Discord, you've probably seen or used spoiler tags. They're one of those little features that make conversations smoother, especially when the topic is a new game, movie, or show that not everyone has caught up on.

If you spend time on Discord, you've probably seen or used spoiler tags. They're one of those little features that make conversations smoother, especially when the topic is a new game, movie, or show that not everyone has caught up on.

Spoiler tags let you hide text or images so others can choose whether they want to see them. Until someone clicks on it, the content stays blurred or hidden. That way, no one accidentally ruins a surprise twist or ending.

What Are Spoiler Tags on Discord?

A spoiler tag is basically a cover for your message. When you wrap a spoiler tag around text or an image, Discord hides it until the reader clicks to reveal it. This gives people control over when they want to see the content.

It's not just about hiding story endings either. Spoiler tags can also be used for sensitive content, private jokes, or anything you'd rather not put right out in the open.

Why Bother Using Them?

Think about this: you're in the middle of a game you love, and someone casually blurts out the ending in a group chat. Annoying, right? That's exactly the kind of situation spoiler tags are made to avoid.

Using them shows respect for other people's experiences. Whether it's the last episode of a show, a newly released movie, or even a major plot point in a game, hiding spoilers keeps the fun intact for everyone.

How to Add a Spoiler Tag on Discord

Adding spoilers is simple, and Discord gives you a few ways to do it:

1. Using Bars

- Type your message and wrap it in double vertical bars.
- Example: '||This is a spoiler||'
- When you send it, the text will appear hidden until clicked.

2. Using the Spoiler Button

- Show the part of your message you want to hide.
- Right-click or tap and select Mark as Spoiler.
- Discord will automatically apply the spoiler format.

3. For Images or Attachments

- Before sending, check the box that says Mark as Spoiler in the upload menu.
- Your image will be hidden until someone chooses to view it.

Tips for Spoiler Etiquette

- Use spoiler tags for anything fresh: big plot twists, new movie releases, or game endings.
- Give context if needed, so people know what they're clicking into. For example: "|||Ending of Episode 5|||."
- Don't overuse them: not everything needs to be hidden, so keep it for actual surprises or sensitive details.

Final Thoughts

Spoiler tags might seem like a small feature, but they keep conversations fun and respectful. Instead of spoiling someone's experience, you give them the choice to see content when they're ready.

So next time you're about to reveal a major twist or ending, throw it behind a spoiler tag. Your friends will thank you, and your group chats will stay drama-free.
