In brief

Probuilder.com has been around for a very long time; starting life as a print magazine (and there is still a print version), Professional Builder is one of the foremost providers of business content to the home building and construction industry in the United States.

Probuilder.com has been around for a very long time; starting life as a print magazine (and there is still a print version), Professional Builder is one of the foremost providers of business content to the home building and construction industry in the United States. With a massive circulation of over 120,000, it goes out to construction businesses, architectural and design firms and a plethora of related home building industry specialists such as interior designers, financing companies and real estate businesses. No longer relying on print as the sole content vehicle; Professional Builder also provide digital content such as video and social media alongside physical events and exhibitions.

Professional Builder has a huge fan-base, and amongst their accolades are a Real Estate Editors Gold Award for Best Residential Trade Magazine, more than one Jesse H. Neal Awards for excellence in business journalism, and several Magazine of the Year Top 10 awards.

Whilst probuilder.com might be an industry giant, there are other websites out there that can also offer you a great deal of valuable content, advice and direction in the home building and construction industries; here are three more that you might find useful:

Bonus recommendation: If you are in the building and construction game, then you'll already know the value and importance of adequate and affordable insurance. Remember, construction insurance cost doesn't have to be high if you work with an experienced broker to find you the best deal.

1. Home Builder Digest

Home Builder Digest, unlike Probuilder, is a web only magazine with building industry content that covers the United States. It's a very popular source of information for home builders (both trade and DIY) looking for advice on who might be able to help with the design, construction and finance aspects of their construction projects. The website also offers their own consultancy service to assist with building projects.

2. Architectural Digest Magazine

With a more global flavor, Architectural Digest Magazine is more design lead than our other options; focusing on interior design and decorating alongside the latest in architectural innovations. AD is actually a print magazine that has been running since 1920, where it started life as a quarterly trade mag in California. Since then Architectural Digest has become a popular stalwart in the home building and design world and is currently translated into nine international editions as well as a digital version that can be subscribed to alongside the print magazine for extra digital content like electronic plans and videos. The popular website synchronizes with the print and digital editions to carry lots of useful and very on trend content to the home building and design world.

3. Home Building And Renovating Magazine

If you want to see how the pros do it, then read Home building And Renovation Magazine. With plenty of industry relevance, this magazine also exists in a print, web and digital version. It contains lots of professional advice, expert opinion, case studies and even a live event to refer to. Home building Magazine is a great resource for home builders.
